What's Old Is New Again

What is old is new—and luxe—again at What Goes Around Comes Around. The ultra-high-end vintage purveyor, with locations in New York and Beverly Hills, opened in Sunset Harbour in January. Designed by Chief Creative Officer Gerard Maione, the space reflects the company's 23-plus-year commitment to providing timeless and authentic luxury goods in an approachable environment. The WGACA buying team travels the world, hand-selecting the finest items from the most coveted fashion labels such as Louis Vuitton, Gucci, Hermès, Chanel and more. 1800 Bay Road, Miami Beach; 305.271.6200; whatgoesaroundnyc.com

Catherine Opie's "Handbag Reflection," 700 Nimes Road

Liz Taylor: A Personal Portrait

NSU Art Museum Fort Lauderdale presents work by photographer Catherine Opie, who spent over six months photographing the former Bel Air home of Elizabeth Taylor. In her two series, Closets and Jewels and 700 Nimes Road, Opie has created a portrait of the late actress by capturing her personal space, clothing, jewelry, mementos and more. Opie was inspired by William Eggleston's images of Graceland, which created a similar portrait of Elvis Presley. 1 E. Las Olas Blvd., Fort Lauderdale; 954.525.5500; nsuartmuseum.org

Art Deco Digs

The Betsy-South Beach, a gem of Floridian-Georgian architecture, has completed its new "Art Deco" wing within its former next-door neighbor, the Carlton Hotel. Miami architect Allan T. Shulman of Shulman + Associates and designers Diamante Pedersoli and Carmelina Santoro led the two-year charge, connecting the contrasting edifices via Española Way and 14th Place. The Betsy's PACE (Philanthropy, Arts, Culture and Education) program continues its legacy with two public installations: The Orb, a silver dome that encapsulates the overhead hotel bridgeway, and The Poetry Rail, where words by proponents for Miami literature are etched into metal. The Betsy's expansion further boasts a library, a gallery, a rooftop pool deck and two all-new restaurants. 1440 Ocean Drive, Miami Beach; 305.531.6100; thebetsyhotel.com
